Market Movers:

- Wednesday's CPI print and core readings were both in line with expectations, but they remain higher than the Fed's target with CPI YoY +2.6% and CPI Ex Food & Energy YoY +3.3%. After the report, the marketimplied probability of a rate cut in December increased from 55% to 82%.
- Treasury yields soared Tuesday and the dollar hit its highest level in two years ahead of last weeks CPI report which showed an uneven path of easing price pressures in the home stretch toward the Fed's target. The 10-year treasury yield advanced 12bps to 4.43%.
- Small Business Optimism improved and beat estimates while the New York Fed's 1-year inflation expectations fell to 2.87%, below estimates.
- A Consumer Price Index that matched estimates brought a certain degree of relief to traders fearing a hotter print. Yet several Fed officials reiterated their deep uncertainty over how far the central bank will need to lower rates.
- Shorter-dated treasuries outperformed, with the yield on two-year notes dropping from the highest since July. The dollar held at a two—year high. Bitcoin topped $93,000.
- Stocks fell Thursday after Powell signaled there's no need for the Fed to rush with rate cuts as the economy is holding up. The equity market closed near session lows, two-year yields spiked and the dollar climbed after Powell's remarks. Traders reversed bets on a December rate reduction to around 55%, back from 80%. Several policymakers have urged a cautious approach to further rate cuts as well.
- Initial Jobless Claims declined to 217k, while Continuing Claims fell to 1873k.
- Stocks fell Friday with the S&P headed for its worst week in months as the Trump trade lost steam and October retail sales fell.
